John Paul Seeking New Social Doctrine For Latin America

By E.J. Dionne Jr.

GUAYAQUIL, Ecuador -When the Vatican issued its paper criticizing the theology of liberation last year, it promised to come up with its own version that would express both orthodoxy and a commitment to the poor.

During his trip through South America, which began last week, Pope John Paul II has done just that. He has elaborated a social

In explaining his doctrine, the pope has not backed away from the Vatican's original document. Indeed, he has mentioned it by name several times and criticized over and over the very aspects of liberation theology that the document found offensive.

The pope has said often, for example, that what has become known as the church's "preferential option for the poor" should not be "exclusive." That is, the non-poor should not be read out of the Church leaders, in the pope's view, must not surrender their authority. But what the pope has added to these criticisms is a series of, at times, remarkably specific calls for social reform. If the church is ing then so too, is it against an unjust status quo. Twice this past week, for example, the pope threw himself on the side of peasants and land redistribution. And he said that redistributing large plots was not enough. Governments, he said, must make sure that the newly landed peasants also have the means to make their plots productive. On Thursday, in Latacanga, Ecmador, the pope spoke as an ally of the Indians, often the poorest of the poor in Latin America. He told a crowd of 250,000 that the church supported the Indians' desire "to "The church makes this its own aspiration," he declared, "so that your dignity is not inferior to that of any other person or race."

These were just parts of the pope's social program. He came out in favor of trade unions, social security and pensions - more radical appeals for Latin Americans than they would be for West Euro-peans or North Americans.

And he has not been shy about using tough language. He spoke of the "exploitation" of workers and of inequalities between rich and poor as an "intolerable abyss." He repeatedly chastised the wealthy, as in a speech to workers in Quito on Wednesday, as "the very few who pontiff's speeches and writings is the need for personal redemption. He is for free elections, trade unions and organizing the poor, but in his view, no earthly reform is sufficient. Individuals must redeem themselves through faith. Change hearts, the pope is saying, and you will change the world. And that, he says, is the church's first obligation.

Chernenko: The Talk Is of a Successor

Rumors Abound as Ailing Soviet Leader Ends Year in Power

By Serge Schmernann
New York Times Service MOSCOW - Konstantin U. Chernenko will soon mark his first year in power and once again a Soviet leader is approaching the anniversary under a cloud of rumor and fore-

From the evidence, Mr. Chernenko is ill, perhaps seriously. Soviet officials, lifting a bit the taboo on discussing the leader's health, have said as much.

They have not said what ails him. The 73year-old leader has not been seen in public since Dec. 27. A conference of Warsaw Pact leaders set for mid-January has been post-poned. A visit by Willy Brandt, the Social Democrat from West Germany, planned for mid-January has been post-ported by the second second from the second mid-February, has also been put off.

[However, on Thursday, a Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman told a correspondent of the Cable News Network that Mr. Chernenko was taking his winter vacation. He denied that he was ill.]

The uncertainty over Mr. Chernenko's health has spawned rumors ranging from a report that his respiratory problems have been aggravated by the winter to one that he may resign at the next meeting of the Central Committee, reportedly set for March.

Much of the speculation has a familiar ring. Mr. Chernenko, suffering from emphysema, has been subject to scrutiny from the time he became the party's general secretary What is new this time is that the issue seems to have roused little suspense or apprehension. Western diplomats have advanced several explanations. One is that, in the transitions from Leonid

L. Brezhnev to Yuri V. Andropov and from Andropov to Mr. Chernenko, the leadership has shown it can transfer power without disruption. Another is that the succession seems to have been decided in advance and that

Konstantin U. Chernenko

Mikhail S. Gorbachov, 53, the second-ranking party secretary, is the heir.

A third explanation is that Mr. Chernenko has been perceived as a transitional leader, to hold the fort a little longer before the transfer of power to a new generation.

In Mr. Chernenko's absence, the Soviet press has continued to give him exposure, printing letters he addressed to a conference of peace advocates and to a high school student in Canada. There has been publicity for the publication of his writings in Poland and in France.

He has been assigned a Moscow constituency in the single slate of candidates for elections next month to the nominal legislature of one of the Soviet Union's many gov-ernmental entities, the Russian Republic, and his name has been mentioned in the weekly communiques of Polithuro meetings.

But to practiced readers such spuris of publicity only signal that something is awry behind the Kremlin walls. There were similar flurries last summer when Mr. Chernenko was ill, and also after Andropov dropped from view toward the end of his reign.

Mr. Chernenko's selection as Andropov's successor was greeted initially with some dismay here. Andropov had initiated measures to discipline the economy and its bloated bureaucracy, and to shake them out of the doldrums of the later Brezhnev years.

The measures — the campaigns to get more out of workers, to rout corrupt officials, to shake up the bureaucrats — caught the popular imagination, and as a critically ailing Andropov faded from public view, the legend grew of a man who would have got Russia moving if only he had kept his health.

Mr. Chernenko, rising to power on the strength of a lifetime spent serving Brezhnev, was viewed as a threat to the fledgling revival, as a return to the benign neglect of the Brezhnev era.

But whether he sensed the popular mood or shared to some degree the feeling that change was critical, Mr. Chemenko did not try to undo what Andropov had started. One Moscow intellectual voiced what seemed to be the general view: "We have come to peace with Mr. Chernenko. He has contributed nothing new, the pace has inhabited the remote eastern slopes of the Andes are "the last undescribed pre-Hispanic civilization in Peru." Scholars regard the pre-Hispanic civiliza-tions centered in Peru as the most impressive in South America. At the height of their civilization, the locas controlled a region from Colombia south to Chile and Argentina. But it lasted less than 300 years, ending with the arrival of the Spanish in the early 16th century. Gran Pajaten has been a legend that has fascinated archaeologists for years, particularly after the discovery of Machu Picchu in 1911. The phrase "lost cities" was popularized by Hiram Bingham, the archaeologist who led the Yale University expedition that discovered Macha Piccha. He used it to characterize the ruins of ancient cities in the mountains of Peru, which had been lost to all but a few nearby residents.

But last summer, four Coloradans, inspired by the legends and the 1963 discovery, trekked to the site. The arduous journey, by coule and then by foot, took several days, and they spent more than a week examining and photographing the ruins. MADRID — Spain's ruling Socialists and the Basque region's nearly 40 million people. The regoverning party have ended five gion, an industrial base, has tugged years of estrangement by signing a egislative pact designed in part to politically isolate separatist Basque

Government officials said that the pact, signed on Wednesday, is the most important development in the troubled relations between Madrid and the Basque region since the signing of the Statute of Guernica five years ago giving the region

The fulfillment of that statute has been mired since its signing in political bitterness, personal jealousies and regional passions, including hundreds of kidnappings and assassinations by Basque guerand quickly worked out compro-

New Zealand U.S., at Odds Over Calls by Nuclear Ships

If the visit of the U.S. warship is denied, a State Department spokesman said, the United States would have to reconsider our participation with New Zealand" in an ANZUS naval exercise scheduled for March and "the implications for our overall cooperation with New Zealand" under the ANZUS alliance treaty.

The ANZUS treaty was signed by Australia, New Zealand and the United States as a mutual defense pact more than 30 years ago.

At a news conference in Wellington earlier Thursday, Prime Minister David Lange referred to the U.S. request and reaffirmed his Labor Party government's policy of refusing to allow port visits by any warships that are nuclear-powered or armed with atomic weapons.

in a strong response to Mr. Lange's statements, a U.S. State Department spokesman said: The denial of port access would be a matter of grave concern which goes to the core of our mutual obliga-

A senior State Department official said the New Zealand reply "still leaves the door open a crack." He said U.S. officials are in contact with Mr. Lange and are trying to obtain a "definitive" response.

Even if Washington is unsuccessful in this particular request, he said, the United States will keep trying with other requests and hopes to have the issue resolved before the ANZUS meeting in July.

of their border front Friday in what Baghdad called a failed Iranian counter-offensive and Tehran termed a "futile" Iraqi assault.

Iraq's official news agency said Iraqi soldiers crushed an Iranian counterattack that was apparently aimed at regaining territory lost during Baghdad's two offensives this week. The Iraqi statement said the counterattack was repelled shortly after midnight in the central sector of their 730-mile (1,180-kilometer) battlefront.

However, Iran's official news agency described the only battle in the central sector Friday as Iranian forces forcing back another "futile attack" by Iraq near the town of Sumar, about 78 miles northeast of

Mississippi Schools: Land-Rich, Cash-Poor

Of the 27 states granted school trust lands by the federal government in the past two cen-turies, only 10 retain all or most of them. One of these is Missis-sippi, which holds all 644,559 acres (about 260,000 bectares) granted in 1804, when Mississippi was still a territory, in accordance with the Jessesonian ideal that the young republic depended upon an educated

Books on Succeeding Are Doing Just That

Books on personal computers and celebrity fitness are sliding off the best-seller lists, to be replaced by an old category that has gained new life: how to suc-ceed in business.

"Success Is a State of Mind" by Dr. Joyce Brothers, a television psychologist, and "Strate-gies for Personal and Business Growth" by Mary Cuming-ham, an executive, are two such books, and much pop-business advice also is being purveyed in audio cassettes, seminars, vid-cotapes, computer programs and such magazines as Success, Venture, Wealth, Entrepreneur and Working Woman.

The Los Angeles Times as-cribes the public's growing ap-petite for business know-how to Americans' time-honored passion for self-help, concern about competition from abroad and the country's more conservative tilt.

Short Takes

Philanthropy by organized re-ligion in the United States totaled at least $7.5 billion in 1983, far exceeding the much more publicized gifts of $3.1 billion by corporations through their own foundations and $3.46 billion given by other secular funds, according to the U.S. Council on Foundations. Religious grants have shifted from saving souls to helping so-ciety, in everything from inner-city soup kitchens to digging wells in Sudan.

The administrative commit-tee of the U.S. House of Representatives reimburses traveli congressmen and their aides a flat $75 a day for hotels and meals except for high-cost geo-graphical areas" like Manhattan ($164.35) and Vail, Colora-do ($128.65 during the skiing season, December through April). Louisville, Kentucky, rates only one thin dime (10 cents) over the $75 minimum and Madison, Wisconsin, a mere nickel more for $75.05.

More than two-thirds of American women of working age, including three-fifths of those with children under 18, hold jobs, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. The figures are not new. Air Safety Questioned After Spate of U.S. Crashes

By Richard Witkin
New York Times Servace
NEW YORK — Eight U.S. airline accidents in the last two months, five involving fatalities, have brought new urgency to the debate over whether the U.S. goverument's control of air safety is adequate.
The Federal Aviation Administration said Thursday it was conducting an extensive analysis of its inspection system. It also acknowledged some problems and indicated that it might seek more money in coming months.

The debate was reinforced most recently by the crash Jan. 21 of a Galaxy Airlines turboprop Electra in Reno, Nevada, in which 68 people died, and the crash Tuesday of had specially inspected.

Officials of the aviation agency repeatedly have noted that the overall record of airline safety has been much better the last five years than it was in the previous five.

'Members of Congress and officials who keep a close watch on air safety acknowledge that the figures are good. But, because of the recent accidents, they are questioning whether the agency has enough safety inspectors, and whether it relies too much on the airlines' sense of responsibility and self-in-terest to insure adherence to operating rules.

In a letter announcing the analysis that was sent Thursday to Representative Norman Y. Mineta, the Democrat from California who is chairman of the aviation subcompilete of the House Public World mittee of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, the FAA emphasized that it was up to the airlines to obey the rules. The letter, from Donald D. En-gen, a pilot and retired navy admiral who heads the FAA, said: "The air carrier must shoulder the responsibility for safety of its maintenance procedures and operations. We cannot let an attitude develop that would let the corporation and the public think that, unless caught by the FAA, air carriers can operate and maintain equipment in any manner that they wish."

Mr. Engen said the agency was making an intensive study of the workload of its 674 inspectors who, United States. To underscore its determination

Kirkpatrick Says She Was 'Misunderstood' as UN Delegate

Jeane J. Kirkpatrick

By Bernard Weinraub New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, who will leave her post as chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations in March, says that she was convinced that her views had been "mis-understood" and distorted by key Reagan administration officials.

But she said Thursday that she was buoyed by her diplomatic and personal "accomplishments" over the last four years.

"I was a woman in a man's world," she said. "I was a Democrat in a Republican administration. I was an intellectual in a administration. I was an intellectual in a world of bureaucrats. I talked differently. This may have made me a bit like an ink blot.

People projected around me."
On Wednesday, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, 58, told
President Ronald Reagan that she would resign her post and return to private life.
In a telephone interview several hours before she was scheduled to fly to Europe for a week, she voiced mixed feelings about her four stormy years at the UN and about her role in the foreign policy establishment, in which she tangled repeatedly with some which she tangled repeatenry win some White House and State Department officials.

"A lot of people said things about me that were not true," she said. "There was a very large distortion of my views. Initially, it may have come from the State Department." Although she had a "marvelous relationship" with many ranking administration offi-cials, Mrs. Kirkpatrick said, "there were about three people who have taken a negative

"They've been accusing me of not being a team player," she added, but she declined to

"Frankly, I am not interested in inside struggles for power," she said. "I find it oppressive and offensive. The point is, I am leaving the UN feeling very good about the last four years. I really do. It was an extreme-

Mrs. Kirkpatrick plainly preferred to discuss her years with the administration in the most positive light. But she has confided to close friends that she had been especially annoyed at what she felt were the efforts to diminish her role by such key White House officials as James A. Baker 3d, the chief of staff, and Richard G. Darman, a presidential assistant "Sure, I feel misunderstood," said Mrs.

Kirkpatrick, who has many offers to write books and also is planning to lecture around the country, resume teaching at Georgetown University and work at the American Enterprise Institute in Washington.

One of the reasons she encountered difficulties, she said, was that "no woman has ever occupied as important a role in foreign policy, as I have."

"That's extraordinary," she said. "Diplomacy and defense have been especially exclusive male preserves. They ought to take a hard look at women inside the State Department."

Beyond this, she indicated that the confidence with which she addressed issues alarmed bureaucrats. "I'm a professor of comparative politics," she said. "I've read and thought and taught about political sys-

"I came to the job with both a good deal of expertise and a good many opinions," she continued. "That kind of background stands in sharp contrast to the normal political appointee brought into a foreign policy post."

She declined to discuss speculation that Mr. Reagan offered her the directorship of the Agency for International Development, but that she found the post, and possibly several others, unacceptable because they did not have cabinet rank and meant she would no longer be a member of the National Secu-rity Council.

Asked about her differences with the administration, she said: "I was not happy about our policy in Lebanon. Almost every-thing about it. I'm not ready to do a critique. I thing about it. I'm not ready to do a critique. I was just not happy with our policy."

On a positive note, the envoy said that the U.S. position at the United Nations had steadily improved, although she spoke of the world organization with some distaste. "There have been accomplishments," she said. "Four years ago, the United States could be and was isolated and humiliated, and that is not easy anymore.

Asked what she and the administration had failed so far to achieve in its foreign policy goals, Mrs. Kirkpatrick replied, "Lots!"

Although Mrs. Kirkpatrick has a reputation as a hard-liner in the administration, she made it plain that she generally opposed U.S. military involvement and what she called

"I am an opponent of direct U.S. interventionism almost any place in the world," she said. "I am a strong partisan of an active U.S. role, helping others. Having the U.S. out front is not workable, and I prefer the regional approach.

"I don't believe in this whole superpower analysis," she added. "I frankly believe we're not all that powerful."

Gen. Walters Gets UN Post

Slow Progress in Jamaica

Ideology makes less difference to economic performance than politicians like to think. Worse, new policies - even the best of policies -sometimes take effect only slowly. Take the interesting case of Jamaica, whose voters turned out a bankrupt Socialist government under Michael Manley four years ago. His successor, Edward Seaga, is a conservative politician who is determined to return the country to the rules of open market economics.

Are things better? Not much, not yet. Events in Jamaica say a lot about the trials of a country at the midpoint in the range of the poorest to the richest nations.

The voters were right to reject Mr. Manley. not because he was a socialist but because he was a persistently unrealistic one. He incited a capital flight and could not end it. He borrowed desperately to maintain a subsidized standard of living for the country. The remedies were pretty obvious, but they have not made Mr. Seaga popular. Earlier this month, the latest round of de-subsidizing resulted in sharp increases in the price of oil and, in response, riots in which seven people died. As Blaine Harden of The Washington Post reported (IHT, Jan. 30), the unpopularity of Mr. Seaga's austerity is helping Mr. Manley.

Jamaica's most urgent economic need is investment capital. President Reagan has tried to encourage U.S. companies to invest, but it goes slowly. Reversing a capital flight is a difficult feat, and it's going to take time. Meanwhile, the country staggers along under the debts of the 1970s, and the bauxite business is not improving. A better bet for Jamaica is agriculture, where there are now promising indications of sustainable growth.

But there is more to it than economics. Jamaica is a small English-speaking country not far off the coast of North America, and there is hardly a Jamaican family that does not have relatives in the United States or Canada. Jamaicans are extremely well informed on the style of life in the rich countries, including the availability of consumer goods and govern-ment benefits. If people in Jamaica work as hard as their cousins in Washington, why should they not live as well? The answer is that they are living in a society whose infrastructure - from the roads to the phone service to the school system - is not as strong. They can be strengthened, but only gradually.

Jamaica's greatest resources are not the bauxite mines but levels of education and public health that are among the highest in the Caribbean. The country is equipped to achieve rising prosperity over time - if Jamaicans have the endurance to resist frustration and impatience. That is the choice around which Jamaican politics is now revolving.

Stone Age Eating Habits

A study by two Emory University doctors concludes that it might be good for our health if we took some dietary lessons from our Stone Age ancestors. The Paleolithic diet included not only a lot of fruits and vegetables, as might be expected, but a high percentage of meat. The difference is that theirs was lean meat, coming from rangy beasts that ran loose and were hunted by man, while ours comes from animals that have been fatted in captivity.

"The diet of our remote ancestors may be a reference standard for modern human nutrition and a model for defense against certain diseases of civilization," Doctors S. Boyd Eaton and Melvin Konner write in the study in the New England Journal of Medicine. It may be that, and it is almost certainly something more: a reference standard for a best-selling book, the surest sure bet imaginable outside of a volume of financial advice, self-improvement hints and one-liners by Lee A. Iacocca Chrysler's chairman, as told to Garfield the cat. Consider the top-selling books in their categories last year, as reported by The New York Times: "Eat to Win," "Megatrends," "The One Minute Manager" and Mr. Iacocca's autobiography. If you don't see "The Cave Man Diet" (as it will inevitably be entitled) on these charts, then you don't have much of a feel for the Stone Age forces at work to exert some influence on present times.

So count on this: Some day in the near future you'll look out at daybreak and see people all up and down your street come loping out of their homes wearing designer skins and wielding L. L. Bean stoneaxes, while every dog, cat and squirrel in the neighborbood runs for cover, and those people who are too old to hunt and gather hurry out to post "No Foraging" signs on their shrubs in the hope that cave men read more than diet books. — THE WASHINGTON POST.

Reder Affair Raises Doubts

Austria has an ambivalent relationship with the Nazi past. Officially it has always been regarded as the first country to fall victim to Nazi aggression, and many Austrians honorably, even heroically, resisted the Anschlüss and the ensuing Nazi rule. But many wel-comed it, and fought enthusiastically as Germans in the Wehrmacht during World War II. By and large, the world accepts that the Austria of today represents the former rather than the latter, and the willingness of the World Jewish Congress to meet in Vienna is evidence of that. But the presence of someone like Herr Frischenschlager [the Austrian defense minister who personally met Nazi war criminal Walter Reder after Mr. Reder's repatriation to Austria from Italyl in the government inevitably casts doubt on that assumption, and is bound to place a strain on the relations between Austria and those who would like to be her friends.

Calm in the Philippines

The prolonged crisis over the murder of Benigno S. Aquino combined with the equally protracted absence [of the ailing President Ferdinand E. Marcos] from public view have shown that the turbulent archipelago can not only function without him but also has a fair chance of avoiding a deluge after his departure from office. Another political figure, Jovito Salonga, has just returned from years of selfimposed exile, but this time, in safety.

Transcending all this is the undoubted progress in the past few weeks of the due process of law in the Aquino case, thanks largely to the moral courage of the government's own ombudsman, Bernardo Fernandez. Now 17 men, including the generals in charge of air security and the Manila police, face charges of alleged complicity in the murder of Aquino and his "assassin" while another eight, including General Fabian Ver, the Chief of Staff of the forces, stand accused of conspiracy to cover up the killings. General Ver is a relative and lifelong associate of President Marcos: if the buck still has not stopped, there is not much higher for it to go. If this trend continues the United States will have less cause to worry about the communist New People's Army.

Belgium Under Pressure

Twice in this century Belgium has been occupied by invading armies. If Soviet troops ever move west, they, too, will want Belgium. That gives Brussels a very large stake in collective defenses that are strong enough to keep he Soviet Union from crossing any borders.

The Brussels government has accepted the basing of 48 cruise missiles on Belgian soil as its share in the collective defense. But domesti sentiment against the deployment compels it to stall until the ruling center-right government is safely past next December's elections.

For Brussels that makes political sense. But the Western allies worry that if Belgium retreats from the deployment schedule agreed on more than five years ago the united front could come unraveled, relieving pressures on the Soviet Union to reduce its own missile force. Belgium's coalition government is under heavy domestic pressure to cancel or at least to postpone the deployment of its share of the new weapons. But if Belgium backs off from its commitment, the Dutch government — which has similar political problems — would almost certainly do the same. Would public opinion in West Germany then force it to back away from deploying its full quota of Per-shing-2s? Washington worries that it would; so, it seems, does the Bonn government.

In purely military terms the situation might be tolerable, given the existence of the global U.S. nuclear deterrent, But Europe's self-confidence in standing up to Soviet pressures could suffer. For that reason Britain, West Germany and other allied nations have joined the United States in urging Belgium to stick by 1910: 'Strong People' Talk and Talk LONDON - "The Strong People," a new play by Mr. C.M.S. McLellan, is a strong play, without doubt; as strong as iron and just about as attractive. As a lecture on political economy, it is a painstaking affair. It was produced on [Jan. 31] at the Lyric Theatre. To give a lecture you must have lots of talk. That is what this play mainly is - talk, talk, and then some more talk. Occasionally, to brighten it up, the dialogue attempts to be snappy. "You have?" "Indeed, yes." "Oh, mustard!" This is not quoted from the play. I would not be so mean to Mr. McLellan. It is only typical. The story is about a strike in a mining town in Pennsylva-nia, where federal troops have taken possession and begun to shoot people. [But] I am afraid Mr. McLellan, who has written so many good plays, has taken himself too seriously. He did not appear before the curtain. Just as well.

1935: U.S.-Soviet Debt Talks Fail

WASHINGTON - A strain was placed on the year-old Soviet-American diplomatic relations [on Feb. 1] when Secretary of State Cordell Hull announced collapse of negotiations for settlement of the Russian debts claimed by the United States, and for the establishment of a trade agreement with the Soviet government on a long-term credit basis through the Export and Import Bank. Blame for the collapse was placed on Moscow's rejection of America's terms, and a serious interpretation was placed on that matter in view of the fact that American recognition of the Soviet government and the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with Russia were conditioned a greatly reduced sum in settlement of all claims, to be paid over a long period of years.

Awaiting a Firm U.S. Policy for Middle East Peace

By Judith Kipper

WASHINGTON — As several important Middle Eastern visitors, including King Fahd of Saudi Arabia and President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, prepare to pass through Washington in coming weeks, expectations are high among Arabs and Israelis alike that these visits will serve to re-engage Ameri-ca in the search for a peaceful settlement of Middle East discord.

The missing factor in the Middle East today is a firm American po-licy. Most Arabs and Israelis under-stand that the United States cannot impose a peace settlement or even serve as a mediator unless the parties to the conflict are prepared to negotiate. But leaders in many regional capitals now say that they need the United States to become more actively involved. As Israelis, Jordanians, Palestinians and Syrians awkwardly move toward a readness to negotiate, the United States cannot afford to remain aloof. Unfortunately, Washington has shown little sign that it understands the need for action now.

Stagnation in the Middle East nearly always leads to crisis, which usually leads in turn to yet another nate. The last major crisis, Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon, blocked any movement in the peace process by forcing a change in the regional agenda. Paradoxically, it drew the United States into the region but severely limited its ability to influence events. In the wake of that policy failure, administration officials have understandably been extremely cautious. By now, however, Washington should be actively promoting the peace negotiations that are so vital to U.S. interests.

What can the United States reasonably be expected to do this year? The agreement by Washington and Moscow to exchange views on the Middle East is an important step. The eventual goal of such an exchange might or might not be a regional peace conference, but even in the meantime the superpowers could be working separately to begin to prepare the political climate for negotiations. As part of the peace process, Moscow should be encouraged to restore diplomatic re-lations with Israel while Washington actively moves to improve its relations with Syria. Second, Washington urgently needs to work closely with Israel and Egypt to help them restore bet-ter relations. If the Israeli-Egyptian treaty remains a cold peace, it will be increasingly difficult to convince Israelis and other Arabs to take the necessary risks to achieve a wider understanding. Egypt is slowly reas-suming its role as a leader in the Arab world while maintaining peace with Israel. Washington ought to encourage this if Cairo's policy — the exchange of land for peace — is to be a precedent for agreements between Israel and other Arab parties. Egypt's return to the Arab world should be a foundation of American policy today.

Third, Washington should recognize that King Hussein of Jordan and Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel need time to get their respec-tive houses in order. Both have delicate tasks ahead. Jordan is trying desperately to work out its differences with the Palestine Liberation Organization — trying to reach a common approach to the peace process. Similarly, the Israeli Labor Party is trying to accommodate the needs of the Likud bloc, its partner in the governing coalition, as the country moves to extricate itself from Lebanon and resolve its economic crisis. Both Jordan and Israel must come to terms with these re-spective "partners" if there is to be peace in the Middle East.

Fourth, Washington cannot overlook the plight of the 1.3 million Palestinians living under military rule in the West Bank and Gaza. In particular, the United States should encourage Israel to ease up on its restrictions in the occupied territories and improve what the adminis-tration calls the Palestinians' "quality of life." Surely, in the long run such an effort would be in Israel's own economic and political interest: Cosmetic gestures to make the occution appear more benign will not help create the self-confidence necary for Israelis and Palestinians to engage in negotiations.

The situation in the Middle East

today requires a hands-on American approach. The objective of American policy must be a comprehensive peace based on United Nations Sc curity Council resolutions 242 and 338—a peace that makes provision for the Golan Heights, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the final status of Jerusalem.

The alternative to a breakthrough will almost certainly be a defeat of moderation in the region. The trend toward extremism in the name of religion is evident in Israel and the Arab countries. Among the threats looming in the months ahead are the possibility of another war, an increase in terrorism and the further erosion of American infinence and credibility. But most dangerous of all, there is a real possibility that the Arab-Israeli conflict will be transformed into an all-or-nothing confrontation among Moslems, Chris-tians and Jews. Until now, both sides' legitimate claims for land and rights have been political issues, which, in theory at least, lent themselves to negotiated solutions. Without a political breakthrough soon, this possibility may disappear.

The signs of the impending transformation of the conflict are evident to everyone in the region. Will the United States alone miss the signals —and thus allow the Middle East to slip into chaos, anarchy and terror? Or will the Reagan administration recognize the dangers and seize the opportunity, this year, to achieve a real breakthrough? Middle East issues are always complex, and it isn't hard to understand why they look so intractable to Washington today.

Yet a firm and determined American policy, sensitive to the needs of Arabs and Israelis, could still achieve political results and avoid the area's looming catastrophe.

Silesia Arouses Little Anguish in West Germany

UGSBURG, West Germany -A UGSBURG, west Germany— A It is all very well to blame young Thomas Finke—he is only 20—for his recent article in The Silesian, a weekly edited by an organization of Silesian refugees and their descen-dants, and to oust him from the ruling Christian Democratic Party. But it would be better to find out how that article — which envisaged the West German Bundeswehr liberating one-time German territories from domination by Soviet-backed East European regimes — was accepted for publication in the first place.

It is the second time the Silesian group has made the headlines recent-ly. The organization is due to hold a reunion in June in Hannover, Heimut Kohl, the West German chancellor, threatened to scrap plans to attend the meeting because of the group's motto, which ran: "Forty years of banishment - Silesia remains ours." The group's leader, Herbert Hupka, reads: "Forty years of banishment -Silesia remains our future in a Europe of free people." The league represents Germans who fled from Silesia when it was incorporated into Polish and Czechoslovak territory. It still hurts to say so, but Silesia is gone. That is not just because of in-ternational treaties, but by a combination of such accords and developments since the war. The incorporation into Poland of Silesia, parts of Pomerania and Eastern Prussia - provinces that were German for many centuries - was one of the prices Germany paid for Hitler's poicy. If ever a peace treaty with Germany is to be negotiated, that price will have to be included into the balance sheet at its full value. Payment, however, has already been made despite a reservation contained in the Warsaw treaty of 1970. In this, the Federal Republic declared its recognition of the western border of Poland in its own behalf and not of a reunited Germany.

A reunified Germany would have to face the fact that there are only relatively few Germans left in the former eastern territories. Some fled before the arrival of the Soviet army, others were expelled during the initial postwar period, and yet others were permitted to emigrate to the Federal Republic under humanitarian arrangements after the Warsaw treaty.

Today, the vast majority of the population consists of Poles. Having ed there for 40 years they are entitled to stay and, since many of them came from the eastern provinces of Poland that now belong to the Soviet Union, they could not return to their former home anyway. A "Europe of free people," a concept suggesting freedom for the East as well, does not offer any prospect of territorial change either. At best, the frontier of Poland, will matter less. It will not be altered unless the Poles so wish. But why should they wish to?

To what extent would this view be shared in Germany? Firstly, no one even contemplates the use of West German military force. Thus, the author did not express anyone else's Pentagon, State Department, and in feelings, perhaps not even his own. In his incredibly silly scenario, he pre-ferred to view the Soviet soldiers as staying in their barracks. Secondly, if asked to formulate an opinion now on what is likely to happen in Silesia, many would shrug their shoulders. Not everybody is carrying around definite views on as academic a question. But all things considered, practically no one would reach the conclusion that Silesia could again be attached to Germany. Vagueness over the Silesian question remains, and some prefer to keep the issue vague. They argue that nothing would be offered in return for a clear prognosis except some condescending remarks from govern-ments of Socialist states. Others, such as the writer of this article, consider a man states would then lose its disturbing aspects for the Poles. Associations of refugees definitely favor vagueness. During the first years of the Federal Republic, they had reason to hope that, within the framework of a peace treaty with Germany, something might still be changed. Later, when in the 1950s the prospect of concluding a peace treaty reflect nothing but a general attitude favoring a tough policy toward the Soviet Union. Evoking personal memories of refugees contributes to advocate such policy and might thereby influence parts of the electorclarification to be helpful in the long run. NATO's Low-Profile Arms Reduction days is on the forthcoming American-Soviet negotiations in Geneva regarding nuclear arms, a team of military officers is quietly working at NATO'S military headquarters outside Brussels. Its task is to recommend how to remove nearly 2,000 nuclear warheads from the NATO stockpile by the end of this decade. This work flows from a decision made by the Nuclear Planning Group of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in 1983 at Montebello in Quebec. At that meeting, defense minis-ters decided to reduce the approximately 6,000 warhead inventory by 1,400. This reduction comes on top of an earlier reduction of the stockpile to 6,000 from 7,000, which was decided on at the time of the 1979 decision to deploy Pershing-2 and cruise missiles to Europe.

Ironically, NATO did not get as much political unleage as it would have liked out of the withdrawal of the 1,000, which was completed in 1980. The Carter administration, concerned that Royald Reagan would use this in the election campaign to demonstrate that Mr. Carter was soft, discouraged any extensive NATO publicity campaign.
Since a warhead will also be withdrawn for each of the cruise missiles deployed to Europe, the ministers have in fact charged General Bernard Rogers, the supreme commander of NATO forces in Europe, with getting rid of a total of 1.864 warheads (assuming the Dutch and Belgian deployments proceed as planned).

At a semmar here in Oslo last year, General Rogers explained in rather candid terms the problems that confront him. He intimated, furthermore, that he was not entirely happy with the ministers' decision. He had just completed a lengthy exercise, designed to produce a better rationale for NATO nuclear targeting plans. Having "wrestled that beast to the ground," he was not happy to be presented with a political decision to make large stockpile reductions.

During a recent visit to Washington, I talked to various officials in the By John C. Ausland Congress who are concerned with nuclear matters. There is a general reluctance to discuss the decision making process which led up to the Montebello decision. The main reason for this is that NATO govern-ments would like to keep the spotlight on consultations regarding negotiations. Hence, meetings of NATO's Special Consultative Group, which is headed by Assistant Secre-tary Richard Burt from the State Department, are given much publicity. On the other hand, when the defense ministers' workhorse, the High Level Group, meets, it gathers in some out of the way place in secret. The High Level Group was created back in 1977. It was responsible for the staff work which led up to the 1979 decisions to deploy the Per-shing-2s and cruise missiles and to remove 1,000 warheads. This group is headed by Richard Perle, who is the assistant secretary of defense for international security policy.

At the time of the 1979 decisions, the European allies realized that they were going to have domestic difficul-ties with the deployment decisions. Some of them felt that further unilateral reductions would be politically helpful. Furthermore, some of them better understood the risks involved in having thousands of warheads scattered about the continent. There was particular concern with the antidemolition mines, which would be used to delay Warsaw Pact ground forces, with Nike-Hercules anti-aircraft, and with short-range artillery. There would be pressures to use all of these early in any conflict. These concerns were shared in

Congress, which has demonstrated its funds to build a new 155-millimeter (6-inch) nuclear artillery shell.

General Rogers is due to make his meeting in Luxembourg in late ern Federal Republic. March. Judging by his comments here in Oslo and guarded observa-tions by various civilian and military officials on both sides of the Atlantic, he will recommend that most of the anti-demolition mines be removed. The Nike-Hercules will also go, since they are due to be replaced by the Patriot, which uses a conventional warhead. These two systems will take care of about half the reductions.

Given the political pressures, a number of the 155-millimeter warheads are bound to disappear. Since there are estimated at present to be over 2,000 artillery warheads, there will still be a large number left. Most likely, some of the estimated 1,850 aircraft bombs will also go, thus ailowing some dual capable aircraft to focus on conventional missions. One should not assume, however, that General Rogers's recommendations, if they are approved by the ministers, will settle the stockpile question forever. Other changes are already in train. For example, the U.S. Army has developed a Pershing-1B with which the Pentagon would like to replace the 72 Pershing-1As held by the German Air Force. (The Pershing-IB has a somewhat longer range than the Pershing-IA and would use a more accurate, variableyield warhead.) The German government has apparently not yet made a decision on this, but it will in due course run out of spare parts for the Pershing-IA. In addition, Congress will soon have to decide whether to keep the production line going on some of the components for the Pershing-2 which would be used in the Pershing-1B.

Finally, there is the question as to whether the Soviet-American negoti-ations will lead to a further reduction of the NATO (as well as the Soviet) nuclear stockpile in Europe and, if so, in which weapons systems.

Who Cared About Tibet? Regarding "Delusions That Undermine Democracy" (Jan. 17) by George F. Will:

Mr. Will, quoting Jean-François Revel, writes of the "total secrecy" of the genocide committed by the Chinese in Tibet. There are errors of fact and of logic here. The Chinese invasion and the genocide were not secret. As early as 1961, an international committee of jurists looking into charges of genocide in Tibet concluded that genocide had indeed been China's policy. But no one cared then, any more than Mr.

Will appears to care now.
Nor was CIA assistance to Tibetan freedom fighters a secret. That minimal assistance was terminated by Richard Nixon when he found that support for the Tibetans was incompatible with recognition of China. What Mr. Will, Mr. Revel and current American policy formulators fail to realize is that murder is the same in Tibet, Cambodia and Vietnam as in South Africa, Honduras and Lebanon. Democracies perish when their actions are not based on morality. When they find excuses for applying one moral set to "pro-American" forces and another to "anti-American" forces. When they find excuses for not following the logical imperatives of their morality if morality conflicts with "strategic concerns."

When we join the bullies we become a bully. The greatest danger to the survival of democracy is the fear to stand up and be counted on moral grounds, which are neither left nor right. The danger is that we will be shaped by our weaknesses rather than our strength.

would be driving down that road last week for the first full-dress talks with their South Korean Sonterparts in 12 years. Instead, earlier in January. Wide-Ranging Show Of Renoirs Opens

TONDON — The first exhibition in London since 1953 of the work of Pierre-Auguste Renoir has

The three selectors — House, of the Courtanid Institute of Art in London, Anne Distel of the Louvre in Paris and John Walsh, formerly of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and now director of the J. Paul Getty Museum - ranged extremely widely in time, subject and collection in their choices, to make this one of the most enjoyable exhibitions ever mounted. It will be shown later in Boston and Paris.

The earliest work in London and Boston is the "Portrait of Romaine Lacaux," the 9-year-old daughter of a porcelain manufacturer, painted in 1864; in Paris, the earliest work, dating from the same year, will be a "Portrait of William Sisley," the English father of the Impressionist painter Alfred Sisley. Renoir and Sisley were fellow students at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts in Paris in 1862-1864. Renoir was born in Limoges in 1841, one of many children of a jobbing tailor, Leonard Renoir. The family moved to Paris four years later. At the state school in Paris, he showed no particular ar-tistic talent, though his musical abilities were singled out by his music master, the then impoverished and quite unknown Charles Gounod. At 13, young Renoir he had to take a job to contribute to the family resources. He was apprenticed to the Levy brothers as a porcelain decorator.

This apprenticeship excited his appreciation of color and compelled precise brushwork, resulting in some of his finest flower pieces in his early years, orthodox Salon works such as his "Flower Still Life"; in his later days luxuriant and splendid work such as "Geraniums and Kittens" (1881), "Flowers and Fruit" (1889) and the bou-

Renoir's mind, the ultimate vision of timeless beauty.

For all that, Renoir, who died in 1919, had ever concerned himself with the people and places around him, never forgetting that, as he put it, "the purpose of a painter is to decorate a wall." The decorative qualities of his painting are most clearly apparent in the trio "Dance at Bougival," "Dance in the City" and "Dance in the Country," all painted in 1882-1883. Each canvas portrays in life size a dancing couple. In Bougival, the woman waltzes with delicious abandon in the arms of an alluring oarsman." as a story by Renoir's writer friend Paul Lhote describes the scene. A Limited Craze for Neoclassical Works

Neoclassical furniture and furnishings are just taking off. There were pieces worthy of a museum in Monday's sale. They included a pair of torchères designed like Roman three-wick oillamps on tall stands. The shafts, made of brown patinated bronze, glittering gilt bronze and or-molu, rise from naturalistic bird claws and are supported by mahogany pedestals. They look like some anticipation of Surrealism. The highly knowledgeable experts Roland Lepic and Alain Nazare Aga could not remember seeing the model before. The pair went for 120,000 fracts, well below their potential price on the interna-

Two 'Tristans': A Memorable Mark in Paris...

International Herald Tribune PARIS — It has been 20 years since Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" last had a new staging at the Paris Opera — in Wieland Wagner's replica of his now historic Bayreuth production and with Birgit Nilsson and Wolfgang Windgassen in the title roles - and 13 years since it has been heard here at all, so its return this week

So it is with this production, which Paris shares with the Cologne Opera; it is staged by Michael Hampe, director of the Cologne Opera. The designer, Mauro Pagano, has constructed a flexible and effective unit set consisting of a circular, raked playing area semi-en-circled by a plateau at a higher level - equally adjustable for the two decks of the ship, the garden and walls of King Mark's castle or the courtyard and ramparts of Tris-tan's fortress. Aside from a preposterously phallic ship's tiller in Act I or a heavy insistence on Tristan's role in his own wounding. Hampe and Pagano took it easy on the symbolism, making effective use (aided by Bruno Boyer's lighting) of the psychological opposition of night and day. OPEC Price Cut Expected To Benefit U.S. Economy

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service OUMA, Louisiana - That oil prices are coming down is good news for almost everyone. But here in Houms, the seat of Louisiana's Terrebonne Parish, a place that lives on oil, anxieties have been climbing since word came from Geneva on Wednesday that OPEC had decided to cut some of its oil prices by as much as $1.41 a barrel.

"A few years ago," said a Houma lawyer, Kenneth Watkins,
"we were sore at OPEC for jacking up prices, and now we're sore at them for price cutting."

Terrebonne Parish has already been hurting from the decline in oil prices in the last few years. Its unemployment rate, negligible at the start of the 1980s, is now higher than 10 percent. About three-quarters of Terre-ing shops, food catering and so on. It is the service companies that have been hardest hit as the oil producers cut back. Delta Services, which had employed nearly 1,000 workers doing a variety of oil field support operations, has just shut down.

The whole state of Louisiana is feeling the pain as world oil held. Mark Drennen, the state's legislative fiscal officer, says that the average price of Louisiana oil over the 1985-86 fiscal year will probably be about $25 to $26 a barrel, "and that's a far that $24 per price of Louisiana oil over the 1985-86 fiscal year will probably be about $25 to $26 a barrel, "and that's a far cry from the $34 we were looking at a couple of years ago." Allowing for inflation — and the Consumer Price Index has risen more than 20 percent since 1980 — the slide in oil prices has been even greater.

"OPEC's benchmark price is not necessarily what Louisiana gets for its oil," said Bob Keeton, the chief fiscal analyst of the State Senate in Baton Rouge. Mr. Keeton is staying with his searlier estimates that Louisiana will end its current fiscal year next June 30 with a deficit of about $100 million. "And if our oil price projections are right," he told Jack Wardlaw, a reporter for The Times-Picayune of New Orleans, "they're going to cut about $127 million off the top of that"

OUISIANA's woes can be matched in other big oil-producing states such as Texas and Oklahoma. But even after taking full account of the damage that falling oil prices may do to oil-producing states and nations, the gain to consumers and business in the United States and in most of the world economy looks still greater. A 10-percent decline in oil prices is likely to reduce inflation by about one-half percentage point. And that could mean an extra half-point off interest rates and And that could mean an half a point of faster economic growth.

This will not be a simple matter of matching winners against losers. For if the national and world economy as a whole advance, even many of the losers will benefit if they are able to adjust and shift to areas of activity that will be expanding more rapidly and

Graham Bishop and Paul Mlotok, in a new study for Salomon Brothers, have warned that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is facing a major financial crisis. The richer countries — especially Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Libya and the United Arab Emirates — have absorbed all the reduction in export revenues since 1982, they say, but the poorer countries

Dollar Broadly Stronger

Central Banks Said to Intervene

By Mary Tobin United Press International

NEW YORK — A surge in the U.S. money supply propelled the dollar sharply higher Friday despite reported intervention by Enropean central banks. Gold eased slightly and silver fell sharply.

Gold closed in Zurich at $303.75 an ounce, down from $307.50 Thursday, and in London bullion was fixed in the afternoon at $303.60, down from $306.65.

In late trading in New York, the pound weakened by almost a cent to close at $1.1195 from $1.1285 Thursday. The dollar rose to 9.7375 French francs from 9.58 in the previous session. Against the Deutsche mark, it jumped to 3.1930 from 3.1655, and against the yen the U.S. currency rose to 257.25 from

The dollar rose at the outset in the Far East in response to a larger-than-expected $4.7-billion jump in the narrowest measure of the money supply reported late Thursday that left money growth above the Federal Reserve's targets.

Most Fed watchers do not believe the Fed will tighten credit substantially. But most said the money supply strength raises a strong possibility of higher rates in the weeks ahead and this buoyed the already strong dollar.

Dealers said European activity was dampened by fear of central bank intervention that reportedly occurred when the dollar bit 3.1785 German marks.

"The dollar fell to 3.17 marks after the intervention but then began inching forward again after Europe closed," said Daniel Holland, vice president at Discount Corp. of New York. "Once it went through 3.1820, a really important chart point, the dollar was very well bid." It rose to 3.1995 before easing

Toyota Calls Tune at Its GM Venture

Concern Insists On the System Used in Japan

By John Holusha New York Times Service FREMONT, California — Japanese automakers help insure that the interior of a car is installed properly by taking off the doors, so they will not be in the way, and then putting them back on farther down the assembly line. U.S. auto executives have resisted the technique, saying it is too hard to get the doors to fit right the second time,

But there is no argument about doors here, at the former General Motors Corp. assembly plant now operated by New United Motor Manufacturing Inc., a 50-50 joint venture of GM and Toyota Motor Corp. On the Chevrolet Nova, the product of the new venture, the doors come off and no back on just are three do. off and go back on just as they do in Japan. Under the direction of Tatsuro

Toyoda, a member of Toyota's ruling family, a Japanese auto-production system has been in-stalled here that is slowly turning out the four-door subcompacts, which are derived from the Toyota Corolla model. The front-wheel-drive car, similar to a Chevette in size, is expected to go on sale sometime this year. "There are a lot of differences between the way we do things here and the way they are done elsewhere, but many of them are quite subtle," said Robert W. Hendry, a former GM financial executive who is manager of gen-eral affairs and comptroller at the Fremont plant. The impor-tant thing is that they are all part of a system,

One significant way the Toyota-managed venture differs from the plants now being operated in the United States by its Japanese rivals, Honda Motor Co. and Nissan Motor Co., is in the composition of its work force. Where the other companies set up plants in rural areas and hired young, mostly white, nonunion workers, the Fremont plant is populated by older workers who reflect the diverse racial and ethnic mixture of the San Francisco Bay area. And they have been represented from the first day by the United Anto-mobile Workers union.

GM and Toyota established their new company in December 1983, and the first car was produced last month. Unlike U.S. companies, which rapidly in-crease production rates after the first car is completed, the acceleration rate here has been slow, cars on its own. "We've learned with fewer than 20 cars coming off the line in December. The current production rate is about a car a day, and full-line speed of 60 cars an hour is not expected to be reached until this fall.

This output level is well below the expectations of GM officials. who had said they expected enough production from the plant to help with the company's 1984 average fuel economy rating. But it is the Toyota executives, not those from GM, who are making the crucial decisions bere, and they are determined to assure quality by not rushing the Saturn, if we did not have the joint venture experience coming on," said Roger B. Smith, the chairman of GM. He was referring to the company's recently announced plan to build small an awful lot from that already."

Officials of the company and of the union here are stressing cooperation. Production workers are divided into "teams" of five to 12, who operate under the direction of a "team leader," who would be a subforeman in a traditional plant. The teams divide up work assignments and each worker is expected to be able to do any job in the team's area.

The UAW, which has jealously guarded multiple job classifications in other plants, has almost completely given them up here. There is just one classification for production workers and three for those in skilled trades compared with dozens when the plant was operated by GM. Auto company executives and

MIAMI - Eastern Airlines and its biggest labor union remained deadlocked Friday in negotiations for wage concessions. The disagreement led Eastern to notify its banks that it had technically defaulted on some of its $2.5 billion in loans and Earlier Friday, the airline reached an agreement in principle with its flight attendants' and pilots' unions. But by afternoon, there was no agreement with the largest union, the 17,000-member International Association of Machimists, which represents mechan-ics, baggage handlers and other ground workers.

Eastern notified First Boston, the lead bank in its group of more than 60 lenders, that it was unable to obtain cost-cutting measures by the midnight Jan. 31 deadline, and that it had technically defaulted on its loan agreements.

The airline also notified the New York Stock Exchange that it was in noncompliance with some of its loan restrictions. The Securities and Exchange Commission requires such notification to minimize the impact on stock trading. Eastern asked its lenders Friday for an extension on the loan agreements. A spokesman, Richard McGraw, said the extension probably would be granted if the labor agreements appeared imminent. The technical default had no impact on Eastern's flights or operations, Mr. McGraw said. But it put Eastern in an uncertain position in which its lenders, if they wished. could call in certain of Eastern's loans that are due. This might restrict the airline's access to a $400million revolving line of credit.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fell 1.11 Thursday, fell 9.05 points to 1,277.72. Declines led advances by a 3-2 margin among the 2,014 issues traded.

Volume was about 105.8 million shares, down from 132.5 million in the equivalent Thursday. Analysts said the stock market was due for a January that took the average to all-time highs.

Before the stock market opened, the Labor Department reported that the U.S. unemployment rate increased to 7.4 percent in January, from 7.2 percent in December.

It was the second consecutive monthly in-crease in unemployment and brought the total of workers looking for jobs to 8.5 million. After the stock market closed Thursday, the Federal Reserve reported the basic money sup-ply measure known as M-1 increased $4.7 billion in the week ended Jan. 21. The increase was bigger than expected and may put investors in a

"money supply was too high."

He said that report combined with news of a 0.2-percent decrease in leading indicators and a 0.7-percent drop in factory orders combined to send the market lower. "After a few days of correction we see the stock market higher," Mr. Hays said. "It's so strong now I can't imagine anything to stop it at this point." He said a rise to 1,350 or 1,400 on the Dow is possible. Advances topped declines for the 19th consecutive session Thursday, although the excess was the smallest since the streak started. William Raftery of Smith Barney, Harris Upham said the string of advances over declines was not necessarily of extraordinary signifi-He said it's just one indicator and "too many others have to be followed." The positive breadth figures may just result from the fact that many secondary issues became oversold in the last part of 1984, he said. Exxon was near the top of the active list and

Phillips Expects Profit Drop Over Next 2 Years

NEW YORK - Phillips Petroleum Co. projected Friday that earnings would fall in the next two years under a proposed $3.5-billion restructuring plan that will be sub-ject to shareholders' approval later this month.

. It also disclosed that T. Boone Pickens Jr., whose bid in December to buy Phillips led to the recapitalization proposal, suggested last month that Phillips may still want to consider cooperating with him in an $8.2-billion leveraged buyout of the company.

Under a leveraged buyout, a company is purchased with bor-gowed funds and the loan is repaid by either selling off assets or using the company's earnings.

Phillips said its directors considered Mr. Pickens's suggestion Jan.

3,500 Groups Sue Manville For Asbestos Removal Funds

NEW YORK - More than 3,500 state and local governments, hospitals and operators of public buildings have filed claims asking that Manville Corp., which is under the protection of federal bankruptcy laws, repay them for removal of asbestos, Manville said.

Claims against Manville were filed at a rate of about 120 per day in the last two weeks of January. The deadline was Thursday night. Manville, once the biggest U.S. asbestos producer, filed in the summer of 1982 for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act, which protects corporations from their creditors

Manville was able to meet its bills at the time it filed, but it faced 16.500 lawsuits from individuals or survivors of individuals who said they had been injured by contact with asbestos. Asbestos is valued for its fireproofing qualities. But microscopic fibers released when it crumbles can enter the lungs and cause cancer or an emphysema-like condi-tion known as asbestosis, according to medical studies. There are now more than 19,000 health claims, amounting to bil-lions of dollars. They were not af-fected by Thursday's deadline. The time limit applied to build-ing operators seeking reimburseand allows them to continue operating while they devise a plan to ardous asbestos from their

Hutchison Sells Tunnel Stake

HONG KONG - Hutchison Whampoa Ltd. has sold its 26.17 million shares, a 20.6-percent stake, in Cross-Harbour Tunnel Co. for more than 250 million Hong Kong dollars ($32 million) to institutional interests in Hong Kong and in London, a company spokesman said Friday. He said the funds would help finance Hutchison's acquisition of 34.6-percent of Hongkong Electric Holdings Ltd. from Hongkong Land Co. Separately, Simon Murray, Hutchison's chief executive officer is to preced Hongkong ficer, is to succeed Hongkong Land's chairman, Simon Keswick, on the board of Hong-kong Electric, the utility said Friday.

Toyota Calls Tune at Its GM Venture

The new attitude represents quite a change from when the plant was operated by GM, although almost all the people on the assembly line worked in the plant.

T EONARD SILK is among the most perspica-As economics columnist for The New York Times since the early 1970s, he has had a ringside seat at the unfolding drama. In "Economics and the Real World" he shares his accumulated wisdom.

The book is largely an account of the United States's political-economic turbulence since Lyndon Johnson sought both Vietnam guns and Great Society butter. Silk takes us through Nixon's devaluation and wage-price controls, the first oil shock, Ford's efforts to "Whip Inflation Now," Carter's fiscal stimulus, the second oil shock, Paul Voicker's success at breaking the back of inflation by throwing the economy into reverse, and Reagan's yawning budget deficits.

Some of this story is familiar. Silk documents the grim trade-offs presidents have to make between inflation and unemployment, and their belated efforts at countering the business cycle. But overlying all is the rhythm of American politics. Silk shows us presidents opting for a lower-unemployment, higher-inflation trade-off in election years, and arranging for the bottom of the recession to occur before the election year so that the voters experience a vigorous recovery by the time they go to the polls. He also shows how administrations aim for a "misery index" (the combined rates of inflation and unemployment) under 10 on Election Day regardless of what happens afterward, and how they play cat-and-mouse with the Federal Reserve Board often prodding, cajoling and threatening it into political expedience.

Along this historic journey, Silk takes the reader on assorted detours — a conversation with the conservative economist Frederich August von Hayek, ruminations on the relationship between democracy and capitalism, a tour through the Soviet economy, a sampling of Carter oil diplomacy, an exegesis on the cultural differences between New York and Washington. Throughout, Silk is on the lookout for clues about how ideals and organizations influence economic outcomes, how politics shapes markets. These engaging vignettes, many based on personal experience, provide further in-sights into the political management of the economy, suggesting the practical and ideological limits within which our past five administrations have pay more heed to the international economy in ting fiscal and monetary policies. The globe is fast becoming an integrated banking, production and technology system. Everything the United States does reverberates through this larger system and then comes back again. Silk also counsels that the United States should rely less on tight money as a cure for fiscal profligacy and that it should explore income policies for restraining inflation. He concludes that the United States shouldn't try to "plan" its economy, but that Americans should realize they already have an aggressive industrial policy. The United States's "mixed" economy reflects messy, practical compromises with ideology. None of this is particularly controversial. It is the very model of conventional wisdom. Indeed, the book suffers from a tendency toward glibness. At one point, for example, Silk reduces the contest between Republicans and Democrats in Congress over Reagan's 1981 economic program to a simple two-person game in which each participant has just two choices. And Silk tends to focus almost excluly on fiscal and monetary poli of taming inflation and unemployment. He barely mentions improving productivity and international competitiveness, or the ubiquitous policies, such as trade, education, antitrust, government procure-ment and subsidized research, that bear upon these Still, "Economics in the Real World" is a wonderful antidote to the posturing, pontificating and theorizing of economists who refuse to deal with (or are incapable of recognizing) the very human world we live in. Silk puts economics back where it belongs—into politics and social psychology. It will leak out, to be sure. But in light of this book it will never look quite the same to you again.

Five Nations Rugby: French Team Emerges As the One to Beat

By Bob Donahue

By DOD DONAING.

International Herald Tribune

LONDON — The Five Nations rugby season starts Saturday with France as the team to beat. Scotland's new coach, Colin Telfer, expressed the common wisdom the other day when he said most of the interest of this year's race would be seeing which of the four British Isles teams is the best also-ran.

A thoroughbred and four rags? Whoa, say the French, who are trying hard to keep their feet on the ground. But Steve Jones, editor of Rothmans Rugby Yearbook, sees France as "the most overwhelming favorite in a decade."

The French, under coach Jacques Fouroux, have been the leading rugby power in Europe since 1981, when they won a grand slam of four victories. Upsets by Ireland in 1983 and Scotland last March, and the loss of both tests on tour in New Zealand last June, showed a lack of composure away from home. Fouroux, rightly pointing out the youth of key players, keeps calling his men "a good team but not yet a England gets first crack at the French and has home advantage Saturday. Underdogs sometimes win, or force a draw. Yet never in 29 previous official visits, starting in 1907, have the French been so heavily favored to beat the English. And France has won four of its last five matches at Twickenham.

"They have an established team with many stars, while England are trying to find their way and need time to develop," says England's coach, Richard Greenwood. He has tried 51 players in the space of a year — an astronomical figure.

In the other match on opening day. Scotland is the favorite at home.

In the other match not opening day, Scotland is the favorite at home against Ireland. Wales — probably the chief threat to France and Scotland this year — is idle. Scotland this year — is idle.

The Scots had a grand slam of four victories last year, scoring 86 points and allowing 36; the Irish lost all four of their matches, scoring 39 points and allowing 87. That contrast of symmetrical success and failure ought to be less stark this year; but not much.

Grand clam minutes often decompages and clams the next year.

Grand slam winners often decompress and slump the next year. Scottish officials have tried to renovate their team by dropping three veterans — locks Bill Cuthbertson and Alan Tomes and prop Jim Aitken, the 1984 captain. Flanker David Leslie and prop Iam Milne.

arguably Scotland's most valuable players last year, are out injured.

Flyhalf John Rutherford, hooker Colin Deans, flanker Jim Calder and fullback Peter Dods, the goalkicker, are key holdovers. Newcomers include the leading try-scorer in Scottish club rugby, Iwan Tukalo. The captaincy reverts to scrumhalf Roy Laidlaw.

Ireland is an unknown quantity. Of the 15 men who played on opening day last year, nine are gone, including Ollie Campbell, Moss Keane, Willie Duggan, Fergus Slattery and John O'Driscoll. Prop Phil

Orr is the only real veteran left. Other holdovers include lock Donal Lenihan, fullback Hugo MacNeill and hooker Ciaran Fitzgerald, the captain.

Mick Doyle, Ireland's new coach, has announced a running game.

Mick Doyle, Ireland's new coach, has announced a running game. The key man, if the forwards can deliver enough possession to the backs, will be new flyhaif Paul Dean, who beat out Tony Ward. Center Michael Kiernan, unlike Scotland's Dods, is not a specialist goalkicker. Still, his kicking kept Ireland in contention against Australia in November.

Australia beat all four British Isles teams, after losing a test series in France the year before. The whitewash — by an aggregate 100 points to 33, and 12 tries to one — raised an outcry of disgust in London. A leading commentator mouned that British rugby seemed to be at its lowest point in history.

Philippe Dintrans, France's new captain since the retirement of Jean-Pierre Rives, thinks his team can match that Australian feat. As it happens, the Australians' test series began at Twickenham. The winning score was 19-3.

Five Nations play is starting two weeks late; frozen turf in Paris and snow in Dublin forced rescheduling of both Jan. 19 matches to March

Paris, gets time to recover injured lock Robert Norster, Europe's best ineout jumper, and will now start at home on Feb. 16 against England, which has not won in Cardiff since 1963.

French respect for the difficulty of winning at Twickenham—their biggest victory margin at the old stadium southwest of London is a mere eight points (11-3, in 1951)—helps Fouroux to combat overconfidence. But he would rather have started at home against Walse.

The cornerstone of France's planning is tighthead prop (No. 3) Jean-Pierre Garuet, who faces England's loosehead (No. 1), Phil Blakeway. Fouroux believes in the tactical and psychological advantages of dominant scrummaging. The duel between Garuet and Blakeway — both 5-foot-10 (177 centimeters) and about 230 pounds (104 kilos) — will be crucial.

England will need a maximum of possession from the lineouts, where much will depend on new lock Wade Dooley, 6-foot-8 (203 centimeters). Behind the forwards, new flyhalf Rob Andrew, who kicked 18 points against Romania on Jan. 5, leads a rejuvenated set of backs who are mainly present or past Cambridge men. The public would like them to prove a thing or two to the French — who think France has the best backs in the world.

Stenmark Wants Chance To Race With Girardelli

BORMIO, Italy - If Marc Girardelli turns up to compete at the World Alpine Ski Championships, many rivals can kiss goodbye any hopes they had of gold medals. But one man with more to lose than most by Girardelli's racing bere is Ingemar Stenmark, and he welcomes the chance to compete against the skier who has replaced him as the world's top slalom and

"It's great that he's allowed to compete," Stemmark said Friday.
"After the fuss over Girardelli's nationality, all the pressure will be on him. I'm very pleased to be coming to an event and not being the favorite for once."

Stenmark, winner of five Olympic or World Championship gold medals during his long career, will be hoping to add to the hand at his last major championships. But the meteoric rise of Girardelli, the winner of seven World Cup races this season, means Stenmark will have to be in superlative form to bow out with further golds.

Girardelli's participation in the championships became possible only Thursday when the International Ski Federation ruled that the continue after these Championships. 122, the Los Angeles Clippers 99, and Portland 129, Golden State with confidence."

license from the Luxembourg ski federation.

That is good enough for World Cup races but under the international federation's rules, a skier may represent a nation in major championships only if he holds a passport from that country, or has residence there and is in the process of obtaining citizenship.

The problem for Girardelli until he changed his mind less than two weeks ago was that he refused to give up Austrian citizenship and take Luxembourg nationality. That ruled him out of the last World Championships in 1982 and the 1984 Olympics, but things are dif-ferent now that he is one of the hottest properties in skiing. The decision on whether Girardelli races in the giant slalom and slaloms scheduled for next week rests with him.

The international federation accepted documents from the Luxembourg government confirming that Girardelli had initiated nationality proceedings, but the federation's president, Marc Hodler, insisted the skier must provide a written guarantee, on his word of

Royalists Attract Youth in France

By James Rupert

PARIS — Under the somber gray dome of the Chapelle Expiatoire off the Boulevard Haussmann, 600 French people stood bundled against the cold on a recent weekend to welcome the man they consider their king.

He arrived in a small Peugeot and was led in by several Catholic priests, who conducted a solemn Mass. Alphonse, Duke of Anjou and Cadiz head of the house of Bourbon, had returned from Spain on his annual pilgrimage in memory of King Louis XVI, who was originally buried on the site of this "Chapel of Atonement." Nearly two centuries after the French Revolution sent Louis and his queen, Marie-Antoinette, to the guillotine, France's two ri-val claimants to the Bourbon throne find more supporters each year, including a surprising num-ber of young people. French monarchists remain a tiny, splintcred minority, but their growing numbers and the turbulence of French politics convince them that the country's future belongs to a Kingdom of France instead of the Fifth Republic.

Royalist sentiment in France never completely died. There has always remained at least a marginal community of monarchists, including families of the old aristocracy and some far-right

They are sharply divided be-tween two branches of the Bourbon family: the Spanish branch of Alphonse and the Orleanist branch headed by Henri d'Or-leans, Count of Paris. The dispute stems from 1830, when Paris's powerful middle class helped force the abdication of King Charles X and pushed its own candidate, the Duke of Orleans, onto the throne as King Louis Philippe. The orleanistes and the legitimister continue an intense, if usu-ally dignified, argument over musty historical issues ranging from the Treaty of Utrecht to the Spanish Bourbons' rights under the French Constitution of 1791.

Henri, 76, lived in exile for 24 years under a law that banned the heirs of former monarchs from France. Since the law's repeal in 1950, he has lived near Paris and directed the family foundations.

Alphonse

Controversy shook the count's household in October, when his divorced son remarried outside the Roman Catholic Church. Henri, judging the marriage "in-acceptable and inadmissible behavior for a prince of France." stripped his son (also named Henri) of his title. The row made headlines in Paris, especially when the younger Henri an-nounced that he remained the rightful heir. Alphonse, 48, himself divorced from the granddaughter of the Spanish dictator Franco, lives in Madrid. Under the rules of succession he could have been king Spain, but Franco chose to install Alphonse's cousin, Juan Carlos.

Alphonse is a Spanish Air Force officer and has been Spain's ambassador to Sweden. This Spanishness leads many Orleanists to oppose him. "Let's be realistic." one young partisan said after an Orléanist Mass: "Do you think France would accept a Spanish king?" Each claimant shrinks from declaring openly that he should be installed on a French throne. Heari says he is "at the disposition" of France, while Alphonse avoids the subject. Despite their public discretion. however, neither discourages the organizations supporting them.

Outside the monarchist Masses, campaigners sell fleur de lis ties and T-shirts with the slo-

Duke of Bauffremont director of the Institute of the House of Bourbon, said the monarchist movement had seen a spurt of growth in recent years. "Each January, we find more people at our ceremonies," he said. "Even in the countryside, new groups have been forming." The competing Orleanist ceremony at St. Germain l'Auxerrois. the church at the Place du Louvre that once served reigning French kings, was one of several Masses that drew surprisingly youthful crowds. One of the "new monar-chists." 21-year-old Franck Lapersonne, said he and his friends saw a monarchy as a way of damping the political divisions in France. "We are not trying to re-establish the old system of a privileged class." he said. "Instead, we want a head of state who is a moral guide and independent of parties or private interests " Marie-Clotilde Renaud légitimiste and a student at the Sor-bonne, said a number of students felt that a "monarchy is what suits France best. In part, it is an expression of our Catholic tradi-Stephane Bern said he saw both traditions and disaffection with current politics as important elements in the "new monar-chist" sentiment among young people. Bern, 21, a business student, founded the Association des Amis de la Maison de France (Association of Friends of the House of France) last April The Orleanist group now has 1,000 members, he said.

Bern said he used to support the French republic but grew discouraged by what he saw as a deadlock in French politics: "The right failed to unite the country. and now the left is doing no better. Part of the problem is that the presidency is so highly politi-cized. Look at Mitterrand — in one sentence he speaks as the gan "Une France, Un Roi" (One head of state, and France, One King). elected president. Then, he said, the constitution could be amended to make him king and restore the monarchy. Bern, and almost all the monarchists questioned. have a clear model for their royalty: King Juan Carlos I of Spain.

"He is an inspiration," Bern said, "He symbolizes his country, protects its democracy and provides just the kind of moral leadership we want here."

The nearest equivalent to a campaign manager for Henri is Bertrand Renouvin. 41, who in 1971 founded a group called Nouvelle Action Royaliste (New Royalist Action). The organization claims 10,000 members with an average age of 35, and includes a broad swath of France's political spectrum. Renouvin, who is generally sympathetic to the left. was a toyalist candidate in the 1974 presidential elections and won 43,000 votes, or 0.17 percent.

Renouvin might be called a leading theoretician of the "new monarchist" movement. "Democracy has always had prob-lems in France." he said, "be-cause there has been no real arbitrator among political parties. That is a special problem here, because the French parties are so much more sharply divided than in, say, the United States." He said the monarchist move-

A Fumble at Press Ball

Many people might be tongue-tied on meeting a Supreme Court justice. Not the Washington Redskins fullback. John Riggins. "Come on Sandy baby, loosen up. You're too tight," he admonished Sandra Day O'Connor. One of the people at Riggins's table. People magazine's Washington bureau chief. Garry Clifford, said O'Connor laughed and appeared not to be insulted. The 240-pound (108-kilogram) football player slept on the floor for an hour as Vice President George Bush and other dignitaries spoke to a crowd of 1.300 at the Washington Press Club's annual banquet saluting Congress. Riggins was later helped from the room by two People editors who had been at his table. "It was a very funny evening. No one was dying of embar-rassment." Clifford said. Riggins. at 35 the oldest running back in the National Football League, was sidelined several times over the last two seasons because of recurring back problems.

Alain Senderens, a leading pro-ponent of nouvelle cuisine, has bought the Lucas-Carton restaurant in Paris, a bastion of classic French fare, reportedly for 10 million to 15 million francs ($1.05 million to $1.6 million). Senderens owns a top Paris nouvelle cuisine restaurant. Archestrate. Lucas-Carton, on the Place de la Madeleine, has attracted titled and multimillionaire customers since prewar days. It has closed for two months for repairs, though some of the interior cannot be changed, as it is listed as a historic monument. Senderens, 45, was once a chef at tuarant threatened with closure two weeks ago because of "slimeladen" ice machines and mouse droppings, has received a clean bill of health in its most recent inspection, the city Health Department says.
